Spc. Raymond Joaquin Fuentes, 35, had previously pleaded guilty to the charges of sexual assault and maltreatment of subordinates. His sentencing is scheduled to begin June 11, and he could receive up to five years in prison, according to a July 1 Army court of inquiry order. A fourth incident charged is under investigation, according to records obtained by Military Times. Fuentes, a machine-gunner at the outpost at Fort Knox, Kentucky, had previously said he was suffering from "battle fatigue" and drinking too much at the time of the alleged crimes, according to an Army Criminal Investigation Command affidavit cited by the Knoxville News Sentinel. However, after investigators found film of his actions recorded on video camera, he told Army officials he was "being disrespectful and his superiors had instructed him to urinate on the women," the report said. In a statement to Military Times, Fuentes' attorney, Lance M. Hight, said the sentencing was "an absolute travesty." In the coming weeks, the Army will demote Fuentes from sergeant to private and issue him an "other than honorable discharge," per the July 1 order from Army Inspector General David Fortner. Fortner has not ruled out seeking a dishon
