The game is similar to the famous ancient game of backgammon, where you can play with two or three people on the same board. Also like backgammon, it is played with two pieces that are placed on the board and the winner is the one who can move them back and forth on the board to the end of the opponent's life. There are also two players, however, and you have to move one of your pieces and get your opponent to move his.

History Egiptian Backgammon is a downloadable Flash game created by the team at gamescock.com. Released on March 15, 2009, it was the first game developed by the company to become a commercial success. It is an adaptation of one of the oldest and most popular board games in the world, the ancient game of backgammon. In the game, players compete for both the length of their own and their opponents' lives. Gameplay The game is played on a map of Egypt. On the map are sixteen symbols: four of each of the twelve cards in the Tarot Tarot de Marseilles. Your goal is to get your piece to the top of the board, while the opponent's goal is to prevent your piece from reaching the top. Each player has two pieces. You can play with two players, which is the game's only option, or with three, which is more fun because it makes you have to move your piece to your opponents' piece and vice versa. Each piece moves along a path of various sizes. You can choose to move your piece along the shortest path, which moves your piece at the most speed, or you can move your piece along the longer path, which moves your piece at a slower speed. The end result of the game is the complete movement of your piece to the top of the board. Your opponent does the same with his piece. The players do not get points for their final position, though their position affects their life. If your piece ends up on top of your opponent's, you lose your life; if your opponent's piece ends up on top of yours, you win. Reception According to Metacritic, Egiptian Backgammon has a Metascore of 72 out of 100, indicating "Generally favorable reviews."
